Course Introduction

This course intends to explore the associated costs and benefits involved in operating globally through two lines. First, we focus on foreign exchange exposures, which multinationals face (as opposed to purely domestic firms) and financial instruments (forwards, futures and options), which are used to manage foreign exchange exposures. Second, we introduce financing policy for multinationals. Accordingly, we are aimed to give you more details of financial management for multinationals; especially to the potential challenges and opportunities in global financial markets.
