Course Introduction

Latin America is a vibrant emerging region. The region's largest economies, namely Brazil, Mexico and Argentina are all members of the G20, and are relevant for the future of the international system. Although it has been traditionally considered as the United States backyard, following the emergence of mainland China, Latin America and the Caribbean have gained relevance for East Asian countries. This course goal is to approach students to the current reality of Latin America, encouraging them to discuss the relevant issues concerning the regional economy, politics, culture and society.
