Course Introduction	Once being exemptions, international crises nowadays appear to be a permanent situation. They can emerge fast and in different fields like finance, international security, health, tourism, business, natural disasters, etc., or slow, like climate change. Political leadership and managerial skills are crucial in the management of global crises. However, the elites sometimes create emergencies, as the Iraq crisis in 2002 has shown. This course analyzes strategies to manage emergencies at various levels of analysis to implement professional international relations thinking and methodology.
