Course Introduction	This course examines the relationship between Taiwan and China, focusing on the fundamental role of Taiwan's evolving national identity in shaping its political policy while facing a serious military threat from China. We will then examine the history of cross-Straits relations emphasizing the linkage between identity and political policy in Taiwan. Meanwhile, the US has a strong connection with cross-strait relations, therefore, the triangle relationship among the three parties is an issue which is inevitably to be discussed in this course.
